FOREIGN NEWS

From papers received at the office of the Federal Gazette, by the Abcons, captain Hobson from Liverpool.

Extract from a paper entitled, " Remarks on the plan of operations proposed by Au-

The plan which the cabinet of Vienna, has transmixed to that of St. Petersburg, presents a new proof of the intimate confi--dence mutually subsisting between the two imperial courts; and if the war now undertaken to check and restrain the ambition or Bonaparte shall terminate happily. its success must be owing to the continuation of that confidence. Upon this principle we shall without dissembling any diffi. culty, offer our remarks upon the plan article by article, in order to obviate as much as possible, the difficulties apprehended by the Austrian cabinet.

The plan begins with stating as a fact, the real forces of the French amount up. son the new organization to 598,084 men, with the addition of those which are at the disposal of the French government, to 651,961 men." The cabinet of St. Petersburgh has reason to believe that the French army is far from being complete on its new organization, in consequence of the difficulty which the French government has to surmount, and notwithstanding the violent means which it is obliged to use, to muster the French conscripts, who strive in all possible ways to avoid the service.

Besides, though the English should be unable to effect any disembarkations on the French coast, sufficient for the prosecution of regular war within France, they may, nevertheless occupy a considerable number of the French troops by menacing a descent on all the accessible points; on the Lower Elbe, on the Weser, on the coast of Holland, Flanders, France and Italy. The French, in short, must be na. turally obliged to divide their strength, and distribute their forces for the defence of every assailable point of their possessi-

It follows, that the French can never be in a condition to oppose so many as 500,000 men to the operations of the powers of the coalition, and that a deduction of perhaps one third of their forces may be confidently reckoned upon. The disprepartion of 970,000 Austrians and 115000 Russians to the French troops which can be brought against them, will be there. fore less considerable than it has been supposed.

From the unfavorable calculation of the relative forces of France and the allies, which is presented in the plan of the court of Vienna, the following conclusions have been drawn:

1. That the local advantages which France enjoys by its geographical position, whether for defence or for aggression, are such, that it is desirable to remain at peace till a more favorable conjuncture of affairs."

This reasoning would be solid and just, if it were probable that any more favorable conjuncture of affairs should hereafter arise; if the court of Vienea could in the meanwhile prepare and augment its forces, and if, the state of things should in other respects remain unaltered.

But, while Europe temporizes, Bona. parte's government acquires every day new stability. His power increases by the sub. jugation and new organization of all Lombardy and Parma. The relative geogra. phical advantages can undergo no change favorable to Austria; but in fact, the contrary. Besides, there can be nothing more dangerous than the policy of the French government, which has ever gained more by negociations than by its arms. If we enumerate the battles of the last war, the French lost as many as they gained. It is always in the intervals between one great period and another, in seasons of sincere, nominal peace, that they enlarge their dominions.

We are therefore firmly persuaded, that the court of Vienna, if it would consult its own true interests, should not hesitate to renew the war as speedily as possible, and ought to make every effort to prevent Bonaparte from consolidating his power -Assured of the assistance of Russia and England, when shall it find a conjuncture more favorable?

The second thing assumed as a couclu. sion in the Austrian plan is, "that if war be inevitable, the allied courts ought to act with the most vigorous efforts of which they are capable." In this, the court of Viena has formed a just opinion. But it errs, in supposing for a moment, that it would be left alone in the midst of the contest. The good faith and non to of his majesty the emperor of Russia, are too well known to admit a shadow of mistrust upon this head.

After this conclusion in the plan, ore mentioned three things, the co-operation, of which is requisite, in order to bring forward those great energies which are necessary to the success of the alliance, name. ly, the military arrangements, and the general policy.

1. "It is stated, that military efforts would be of no avail, if the Austrian armies should enter the field less than 300,000 strong."

We entertain too high an opinion of the resources of the court of Vienna, to doubt that the Austrian army may be put in a short time upon such a respectable tooting as to enter the field in sufficient force -Being in alliance with Russia, and certain of the good faith of that power, it will have only France to oppose, and will not be under any great necessity of maintain. ing a force to observe Prussia.

It is very true, that the French, as soon as they shall see war to be inevitable, will put themselves in motion; and that Aus. tria will have to sustain their first attack till the Russians join them. But, as the Russian troops are ready to march, a body of them may be detached immediately, which shall advance by forced marches to assist in the protection of the house of Austria, and to resist the first impetuosity of the torrest.

2. The finances are next mentioned in the plan. The difficulty in regard to them must be in a great measure removed by the subsidy from England. Besides, it is certainly to be expected, that in this, as in what regards the completion of the army, the court of Vienna will not fail to employ all its means and resources.

The contingent of Russia would be on the whole, 115 000 men. Deducting 25 thousand for the kingdom of Naples, there would remain 90,000 to act in Germany, which might be conveniently formed into two armies, one of 50,000 men to assem. ble on the frontiers of Gallicia, apposite to Lamberg; the other of 40 000, to assemble along the Boug, opposite Lublin.

The first of these armies might, upon the first appearance of hostilities, detach the column mentioned, which should march across Gallicia towards the Danube, to as sist in opposing the first attempts of the French upon the hereditary dominions in Germany, when it should have arrived in the vicinity of Ratisbon; its subsequent movements would be determined by the condition of the Austrian army.

The rest of the Russian army should follow immediately, in order to reach its destination with the smallest possible loss

The other army would march by Lublin and Cracow.

It were to be wished that we should know what routes the court of Vienna would particularly desire that these two armies should take. In all cases, their marches should be respectively so arrang ed, that they may not meet at Teschen.

As to their operations, the first might be employed on the left bank of the Danube, in communication with the Austrians upon the opposite bank, having its left upon Donagwerch.

The second army, upon arriving in Bohemia, would proceed inco Franconia, or wherever the state of affairs should require its presence.

The court of Petersburg is about to send a confidential person to Paris, to make a last endeavor to persuade Bonaparte to listen to reasonable conditions. Should these be accepted, it may prevent the war. But, in the mean time, nothing is to be neglected; for it is certain, that we shall succeed only in proportion as we put ourselves in a respectable position. And we ought to be ready to begin the moment the negociation terminates.

The reasonings suggested upon the probable progress of the military operations, appear to proceed upon very salutary and judicious views. It is agreed, that any operations against the frontiers of France, along the Rhine, whether below or above Mentz, would be attended with great difficulty. It is rather on the Italian line that the first success is to be expected. It is consequently toward that quarter that the principal efforts ought to be directed. All this part of the plan must be allowed to be perfectly well arranged.

Copy of a dispatch from the count de Rasoumofski dated at Vienna, the 29th April-11th May

Since the creation of the council of war, I have this day to mention its fift meeting, which directed to other details than those of the admin istration, at length prefents an object worthy or avoid being cut off from the left bank, and attention. The conferences took place in the prefence of his majefty the emperor, on Manday and Toefday laft. The committee was composed of the the two archdukes Charles and John, the prefident and vice prefident of the council, and quarter mafter general Mack. The question funmieted to their deliberation turned on the prodigious increase of the French forces to Italy; on the imminent danger which thence reluited to the frontiers of the Heredicary Rates; on the rapidi. ty with which, from the first hoftile determina. tion of Bonaparte, they would be attacked; and on the absolute impossibility of resistance. This emperor Napoleon, to propose it. The firuation was deliberately confidered, and it was unanimoully decided, even with the confent of the archicke Charles that it was necessary to re. inforce the troops in that quarter. This point be. ing sertled, the necessary details will be arranged in confequence; and I lose no time in forward. ing to you the mest impostant of their refola-

Never were hopes, founded on the most falutary views and plans, destroyed by a more fatal blow than the difatte ous reverfe which our army in Germany has experienced by concourse of unfortunate circumftances, the consequence of a fingle fault.

The simultaneous co. operation of the two imperial courts of England and Ruffia should have offered, at the commencement of the war, a chain of armed forces from the north to the fouth, and should have obliged France by mutual diver, fions to separate hers. It was our first misfor. tune, that none of the hopes we had placed in divertions on the north of the Continent, which might have obliged the emperor of France to divide the troops that he had withdrawn from his coaffs were realized: and not only all the troops were able to be employed against our army in Germany, but even the Gallo Batavian army and that of Bernadotte, could quit Hanover and Holland alfo, without impediment to join in the attack. It is to this cucemflance that the French fuperiority of their numbers; for deducing thefe two armies, the troops arrived from the interior in the easte of the month of October, have but little exceeded the number of Austrian troops, placed on the Iller, where, in the ftrong polition which they occurred, they would have been able to await the ju ction, of the first army of his majefty the emperor of Ruffia. There was even a moment when they had the hope of preventing the junction of the French troops from the North with those arrived from the interior of France, by falling on a party of the latter ; when, as a fecond misfortune, the violation of the Pruffian neutrality fuddenly chapged the face of affairs, and reduced our German army to the alternative, ei her to fall back immediately on the Inn, or fee itfelt furrounded and deftroyed.

The retreat on the Inn should have prevented every disagreeable consequence. Joined to the body of the army under the general in chief, De Kutusow, these troops would have been sufficient to resist the limited French forces; the subsequent arri. val of the second Russian army, and final. ly the developement of other measures of the coalition, might have procured to the allied troops that superiority of force which had been absolutely depended on in the mutual engagements.

Through the inconceivable fault of a general chosen for a reputation gained by former successes, the army of Germany remained on the Iller; and in the course of a few days, without having been beaten, after some slight actions in which it had rather the advantage than the disadvantage. the greater part of the army was taken, and the remainder dispersed. All the following misfortunes were the inevitable consequences of this disaster.

The united French forces in Germany alone exceeding, without the allied troops, 110,000 men, advanced against the Austro-Russian troops posted on the Inn, which amounted to little more than half of that number. To expose these troops to a re. gular combat against a force double their number, would have been to risk the ruin sistiting of the first and second Russian arof them, before the arrival of the second army of his majesty the emperor of Russia; it would have been to commit the same fault that had just lost our army of Germany. On the contrary to preserve the first Russian army entire, until the arrival of the second, became the principal object of the dispositions, which were concerted by his majesty in person with the general in chief Kutusow.

To complete our disappointment, the arrival of the second Russian atmy was de. layed more than a month, by the arma. ments which the court of Berlin threatened to oppose to those of the court of Peters. burg. The troops, therefore, under generals de Meerfeldt aud Kutusow, unable to maintain a position on the Inn, or in any other part of Austria, where obliged to fall back upon Moravia. The inevitable consequence of this movement was the progressive advance of the enemy in Upper and Lower Austria. Having reached the last bridge on the Danube above Vienna, near Krems, the Russian army had no oher alternative than to pass it, in order to from their route into Moravia. From that moment, the face of the capital of Austria was decided, considering the impossibility of defending it, within the walls, puless the time necessary for the arrival of the re. inforcements could be gained by suraus of an armistice for a very short period. Ala, my reasons concurred to render his majesty desirous of saving his capital by such an ar. mistice; he therefore determined to send lieutenant general Count de Guilsy to the negociation was without effect, Vienna was occupied by the French: and his majesty thought by the sacrifice of his capital, at least to have ensured to the first Russian army, the facility of forming a junction with the second. To this effect, he gave the most positive orders, that the great bridge in front of Vienna should be destroyed, whereby, four or five days march would have been gained to the ge. neral in chief Kutusew. Prince Murat, however, deceived the person to whom this charge was entrusted, by the unworthy falsehood that peace was just concluded between Austria and France, and he thus prevented the demolition of that bridge. This cruel incident exposed the first Russi, an army to the most imminent danger of being surrounded and destroyed, before it could join the army of general Bushoey. den, as well as a corps of 10,000 Austri. ans that had retreated from Vienna.

Had this misfortune happened, the continuation of the war would have been evidently impossible. The destruction of the first army of his majesty the emperor of Russia would have infall-bly led to that of the second and of every subsequent reinforcement, successively and separately attacked by the great forces which Napo. lean had assembled in Austria; while the army, commanded by the archduke Charles in Italy, must also have been ruined by these forces united to those of Massena. In a word, the danger was so critical, that had there been no other means of prevent. ing it, his majesty would have been obliged to sign a precipitate peace, unfavorable indeed to himself, but inevitable, from motives which would have been but too justifiable in the eyes of his allies.

The impossibility of prolonging the war -the necessity of saving of the monarchy -the general interest of Europe, and even of England, required him to insure the existence of the Austrian monarchy, rather than continue a war from which nothing could be expected but an issue still more unfortunate. In short the sacred duties by which his majesty was bound to his noble and faithful friend, the emperor Alexander; duties which he shared with every well disposed sovereign, and which imposed upon him the obligation of preferring every sacrifice to the destruction, as cer. tain as it was useless, of the brave and well appointed armies which Russia was pouring forth to his asssistance.

In this extremity his majesty did not he. sitate to enter into new explanations with the emp. Napoleon, and to propose to open negociations with him for peace, as soon as measures to this effect might be concerted with the emperor Alexander, whom his majesty expected to see immediately in

But happily these dangers and necessities are no more. General Kutusow and Buxhoevden have surmounted the diffi. culties which threatened to prevent the seasonable junction of the forces under their command. This mission of the Austrian envoys has been accompanied with the resumption of active hostilities. On the 27th of November the day after they quitted the camp, the combined armies concentred in the environs of Olmutz conmies, with a body of twenty thousand Austrians, comprehending also for their rear guard the imperial life guards ten thousand strong, and making in all an effective strength of eighty thousand fight. ing men, advanced towards the enemy.-On the 28th they had reached Wischin, and had taken in that city and its environs more than six hundred prisoners. On the 29th and 30th they continued their march to Austerlitz, on the way to Nikolsbourg.

COMMUNICATION.

The news received this day of the Leader's arriving at Jaquemel, so far from minishing, rather confirms the hostile in. entions of Miranda against the province of Carracas. The ship Emperor command by a brother of captain Lewis, of the earder, sailed from New York some teeks before from Port-au-prince, with kes and other implements of war, simiat to those shipped in the Leander, and with a coasiderable number of volunteers, with the intention we understand of deauching some mulattoes at Port au Prince, and of sailing with this reinforcement on e intended expedition. We suspect that essalines has had wind of their scheme, it is known that the Emperor was not unitted to an entry, and that all commuucation between this vessel and the shore the Isthmus, between Jacquemel where Miranda had anchored, to Port au Prince there the Emperor lies, will facilitate the informity of the plans and operations of two vessels; but as in the interval neussary to verify their junction news may are reached. Miranda that his plans and destination were known to the Spanish ninister and of his having sent pilot boats Caraccas with the information; we shall hot be surprised if Miranda is staggered and gives up his nefarious attempt.

In regard to out government, and its powledge of Miranda's intentions and imament; we shall abstain from particu. ar comments, and shall only observe that general Dearborn's letter has not in the ast contributed to alter our opinion on is subject; even admitting that it were hethat administration were unacquainted in the particulars of the armament of the Leander, we ask if they were not very well equainted with Miranda's hostile views gainst the province of Caraccas, and of intention of fitting out an expedition tom the ports of the United States? Il is is true, and Mr. Madison's answer on teception of Mr. Vansittart's letter will prove it so, what are we to think of the vigilance of our administration and their delicacy in regard to their foreign re. lations? It should have been expected that Miranda, or any other individual, whose htentions were known to be to violate the lers, ought to have been bound over on food behavior. It might have been also spected that his motions would be watch. his steps followed, and that particular are and vigilance recommended to the tollectors and other federal officers in the United States. Nothing of this appears to have been done. Miranda fitted out his ressel in a manner to excite the attention and curiosity of many individuals, but they foold not find a satisfactory explanation of hese events because they had not that preous information of Miranda's intentions. which it appears that Mr. Madison and ven the president had. Under the exist-the administration, through ignorance, respecting the armament of the Leander, when it is understood they had already information of Miranda's hostile intentions, would be like the excuse of the police, on any murder or conflagration being committed under a plea of ignorance respecting the particular poignard or torch employed in the execution of these premeditated acts, previously known to it.

Mr. Ogden's journey to Washington, a Madison, and the mysterious secrecy of Wilfon. 57. their results, at the present time, are by no means calculated to inspire much conh. dence; neither are the quibbling contradictory rumors respecting col. Smith's removal. If administration is obliged to be just, they do not labor under a less obligation to appear so.

The following is the residue of the SECRET FOURNAL of the House of Representatives (for which we had not room in our last paper) which is now com- 62: as follow: pletely published, so :ar as the injunction of secrecy is removed. We understand Our readers will perceive that the whole of the proceedings, so far as relates to the measures adopted, were inserted in our last; and that the following proceedings to in the report made by Mr. J. DIED this morning, at his country seat, in an advanced stage of life, CHABLES ALEXANDER, Sen. Baq.

A panegyrie on the virtues of this gentleman would be highly unnecessary, as his whole life exhibits a sufficient demonstration of the excellence of his principles and the purity of his intentions. His family must long remember the domesticen. dearments of an affectionate husband, and a tender, solicitous father. The morality of his character has never been questioned -his faults were always forgotten when the brilliancy of his virtues was considered - his hospitality, his honor, and honesty demand the undisputed praise of every candid man, of every lover of virtue, and well wisher of society. His lingering and severe disease afforded him an ample op. portunity of exerting the heroism of his christianity t he resigned his well-spent life into the hands of that benincent Creafor from whom he received nd

Twenty Dollars Reward,

WILL be given for apprehending and fecur ing in jail a young mulatto man flave, med ANDREW. He was hired by me last year to Mr. Jefeph Thomas, who keeps the mid. dle ferry opposite to Alexandria, and absconced from that place about the latter end of August laft. He is about 23 years of age, g feet 8 or 9 inches high, lufty and well made, has thort curled hair, and is frequently subject to have feveval large pimples in his face. He is reckoned to be a fensible fellow, of an easy agreeable address for a man in his low fahere of life. As he has not been heard of by me fince his elopement, I suspect he has had the address to ship himself as a freeman on board fome veffel either at Alexandria or Baltimore. Whoever takes him up and secures him in any jail, shall receive from me the above reward, as foon as due information thereof is given to me or to Doctor N. P. Can. fin, at Port Tobacco.
